More than 30 UN staff and experts have been put on the move by the Assad regime to other countries, including 17 experts with the UN Refugee Agency (UNHCR), after reports of a "massacre" in Idlib, the UN confirmed. On Tuesday, the Syrian regime's ambassador to the UN, Hussam Edin Aala, told the UN Security Council that Syria was forced to conduct a new offensive in Idlib because of "terrorists", as he described the Syrian opposition. "Syria will continue to defend its state institutions and sovereignty from those who have tried to raise terrorism to the highest level," Aala said. Riyadh Mansour, the UN Secretary General's spokesman, said 30 UN staff were being moved to Jordan and 15 were being relocated to Qatar. The staff moves came after reports that at least dozens of civilians had been killed in an attack on Idlib, a stronghold of Al Qaeda-linked terrorists, just weeks after fierce clashes in the area. "Unfortunately, there are reports of a massacre of civilians in Idlib," Aala told the Security Council, adding that he had seen "photos and videos on social media platforms" showing dead bodies, especially 82157476af
